Chapter 1 by Fanwizard

King Augustus was starting to panic. King Edgar's kingdom was starting to close up around him and there was nowhere to run.

Bishop Amadeus approached Augustus, a smirk on his face that traitor. Bishop Amadeus used to be on Augustus' court, but had later been revealed to be a spy for Edgar to gather information. Edgar and Augustus had always had a rift between them because of them fighting over the hand of Queen Alice and even though it had lasted for years, it wasn't vanishing anytime soon.

"Please, Amadeus, don't do this," Augustus begged.

"Oh, I won't," Amadeus said smugly.

Before Augustus could speak, Amadeus rushed over to Queen Alice, knocking her over. She fell dead, joining Augustus' dead knights and bishops.

"No!" Augustus cried out.

One of Edgar's knights, Llamrei, approached, on his broad horse. Amadeus re approached, closing in closer. A chariot, led by Lunete, came with reinforcements.

"No," Augustus whimpered softly. He regretted not really living his life, being such a young king.

"No."

They closed in.

"Now, Delilah, don't be like that," Jackson chided. Jackson was the only person that ever called Lila her real name, Delilah. "It's just a game. Now, how long is my streak?"

Lila scowled again. "Seven games and counting."

"I'm getting some chips and dip," Jackson stood up and headed out of the room. "When I'm back, we're having a rematch to make sure my seven games are eight."

Once Jackson was out of earshot, Lila glanced down at the chess pieces, and the king that was surrounded, the dead queen.

"Sorry guys," she said softly.

But the last thing that Lila expected was the king chess piece to turn and talk to her.
